INTRODUCTION

In recent years several studies of "People of American Indian Ancestry" have been made by experts and professional teams in several fields. These studies and their predecessors have meant quite an increase in the number of available literature and have also served as an indicator of growing interest in such areas. This growth in interest has influenced in part some changes in the nature and direction of policies and programs concerned primarily with assisting people of American Indian ancestry in several spheres and areas of human resource development. However, in spite of the growth in interest and number of programs, there has not been a corresponding increase in the quality of the work displayed. There has also appeared a substantial amount of overlap and duplication. The overlap and duplication are in part the result of a lack of adequate contact between authors and contributors in similar or different disciplines on the one hand, and between administrators and non-administrative researchers and contributors. The slow growth in quality is attributable in large part to the persistence of an inadequate understanding and explanation of the nature of the problems dealt with. This inadequate grasp of the nature of the problems has meant that many contributors have operated on faulty assumptions, some of which have been tested and proven faulty while others, though not so clearly defined, do indicate enough inexactness to make them doubtful premises. Illogical premises and faulty assumptions have not only given rise to poor quality work but have also led to the formulation of impractical programs with little or no substantially definable results.

It is the purpose of this publication to help bridge the gap between contributors and thus help correct and counteract the resulting deficiencies. One of the methods we are using in attempting to accomplish this is the compilation of a comprehensive list (bibliography) of existing references on studies, publications, organizations and agencies concerned with contemporary affairs of People of American Indian ancestry. We hope that a bibliography such as this will be a useful guide to anybody doing work in this area. In time, we expect it will generate enough interest to lead to more extensive reviews of programs and literature which will deal principally with the evaluation of existing and past programs, policies and studies indicating strengths where possible and weaknesses where necessary. On our part we hope to be able to develop in the near future an annotated bibliography, a task which our limited manpower presently discourages us from attempting.

This book is divided principally into seven parts. The first part, and the major emphasis for our purposes, is a general bibliography of contemporary studies and research in change, migration, urbanization and adjustment of people of American Indian ancestry. Other subject matters dealing with related programs such as planned change and conflict, are also substantially covered in this first part. In the second part, another set of bibliography is given. This set consists primarily of studies of a theoretical nature that have been frequently used and cited in the literature. Also included in this second part are materials on other geographical areas (such as Africa, Latin America etc.) that have significant comparative value to the type of studies covered in the first part. The third part is a listing of principal Native organizations in Canada. This is followed by a fourth part that lists existing native publications in Canada and the United States. The fifth section is a compilation of major Canadian Research Centres, Committees and Departments interested in Native Studies. Two other lists, constituting the sixth and seventh parts, were later added. The first deals with major native organizations in the United States. This is followed by a list of major U.S. Research Centres, Committees and Departments interested in native studies. New Native organizations, publications and study centres are springing up from time to time while some older ones become defunct, thus one has to exercise some care in considering these listings as exhaustive of all such units.

We do have some apologies to make. It is very likely that we may have missed out some very important references due to oversight. We tried to avoid this as much as possible but somehow such oversights seem inevitable. While in print, for example, some new sources came to our attention. We do hope that our readers will bring to our attention any such omissions and other errors of any type or nature. We would appreciate such correspondence and will definitely take appropriate action on any such communications.

The history of this publication dates back only a year ago when I did some exploratory work that finally culminated in a special project that I am currently conducting. This current project is being carried out as an attempt to describe, identify, explain and quantify (where possible) the experience of people of Indian ancestry in their efforts to adjust to the urban milieu of the city of Winnipeg, with the expectation that the results obtained will enable us to determine the principal factors contributing to successful or unsuccessful adjustment to city life by native people. Reports and publications based on this project will be made available when analysis and computations are concluded.

In directing the preparation of this document I benefited immensely from the assistance of many people. Miss Rennie Burton did much of the data collection for this volume under very strict and close deadlines. Her patience and persistence are greatly appreciated. Special thanks also go to Mrs. Blanche Betts for preparing the extended version. Preparation of earlier versions was done with the assistance of Bruce McCormick, Mary Romaniuk, Maria Young, Yvonne Lozinski and Mrs. Helen Bailey. Messrs. Walter Hlady, Joe Keeper, Andrew Ogaranko and John A. Price offered very useful advice and technical assistance that made this revision possible. I am also indebted to the Department of the Secretary of State for permission to republish this data in its present format, and for their support in the preparation of earlier versions. To all these people and others I am most sincerely indebted. Needless to say the final responsibility for what appears in this publication is mine alone.

We hope you find the information contained herein useful and helpful.
